

Cleveland Tourists See Sights

WEARING THE LEIS WITH CONSCIOUS DIGNITY.

had planned just such a cruise and at last his dream had been a reality. It was a test and the test has been successful, but the tremendous task of arranging for such a cruise was beyond the understanding of people generally. He felt that he could not undertake yearly world cruises, but that at an other was undertaken it would be two years from now. He had demonstrated that hundreds and hundreds of tourists could be handled on such a trip, that it could be successfully carried out and that the tourists would return to their homes satisfied, but to undertake another cruise would require at least two years' preparation.

Mr. Clark stated all this as the vessel swung up the channel toward the city and he was smiling happily all the time. It was the smile of a satisfied man. Although the Cleveland had caused many of the passengers to suffer from motion sickness on the first day or two, yet they too had recovered their appetites, and were in a happy frame of mind, and all eager to get out on an invigorating stroll.

Ready for Snow.

It was a rather somber-looking crowd of men and women, for but few of them had their summer clothes out. They had just passed from the land of snow and ice, through the icy cold along the coast and had but gradually emerged into the balmy air of the Hawaiian Islands. When they arose yesterday morning and saw the rain mist hanging low over the ocean and the Island of Oahu shrouded in threatening clouds, they felt that perhaps summer was yet far off, and so they came in winter clothes to the gangway and found that after all, Honolulu was a springtime air, almost bordering upon summer, and that white duck and linen would have been just the thing.

Back to Old Berth.

The Cleveland went alongside the Alaka wharf, the new wharf which the great vessel christened only last month, and was brought to her berth by Pilot Macaulay in fine style. The wharf was crowded with people and the Hawaiian Band was there to give its usual greeting. The gangway was soon placed across the space between main deck and the gallery and the visitors swarmed ashore.

Many were astonished at the number of automobiles lined up on the street, and were particularly surprised when they saw a big white car go past with the number 500 at the rear. That a town of this size, a city on an island, thousands of miles from the coast, could have five hundred automobiles, was surprising. To them it indicated that there was some wealth here.

Trolley Ride About Town.

A long line of trolley cars waited the tourists and they were taken up Fort street, out Nuuanu avenue to the terminus where they saw the mausoleum of the kings and queens of Hawaii. The ride was then back to town along Berea avenue and out on the Punahou line, taking in College Hills and Manoa, which appeared beautiful in the morning sunlight, with thin ribbons of water falling from the heights. They were then taken to King street and out to Kalia and back again to the Hawaiian Hotel.

Lunch Ashore.

Lunch was served to all the Clevelanders at two sittings, the entire corps of waiters of the Cleveland assisting at the table. The Hawaiian band played in the little hotel park through out the luncheon hour, and under the trees the visitors found excellent spots for taking group photographs of each other. The open lawns were found excellent places for resting, from which they could view the pretty foliage surrounding the hotel.

Brothers Forefathered.

Various organizations had representatives on hand to look after visitors. The Shriners, the Elks, the Eastern Stars, and the Elks, were there and they rounded up many of their symbol wearers, the War of 1812, the 17th regt., recognized. The Salt Lake contingent, indeed, numbering thirty people, was the largest from any one place, and they were met by about thirty Salt Lakeers, either resident or visiting in Honolulu. It was a merry gathering, and afterwards a group photograph was taken on the hotel steps.

As the cars started up from the wharf an old gentleman stood on the curb, waving his hand and calling out: "Texas! Texas!" for he was from Texas, far away from home and home-sick and wanted to find another Texan. He found one.

The Hot, Hot Sands.

The Shriners are particularly happy. That, of course, refers to the visiting sand travelers who arrived on the Cleveland and were met with open arms and Robert W. Bradburn of the Aloha Temple. There were other local Shriners besides the redoubtable Bradburn and all had tourist Shriners on hand, which is indeed making this a most happy. George Bush of camera, dance and amusement abilities, is a Shriner of the Aloha temple and Burgess of Fresno has from the sandy shores of the Aloha Temple of that building exposition town. Burgess said yesterday: "You, but you've got a bunch of Shriners in this town what's worth talking too. Have a button?" Robert C. Lydecker of musty archaic fame, who has also walked barefooted over the burning sands that surround the mystic precincts of the Aloha Temple took his badge off early in the day. R. C. looks just exactly like a Shriner with a disposition to fit and he was swamped by a horde of the representatives from all over the country five minutes after the Cleveland was wharfed. He couldn't stand it and had to disguise himself to get out of the crowd

PLEASED WITH THE PROSPECT.

TOURIST CHATTER HEARD AT RANDOM

Great is the genius of a western town which wishes to advertise itself! And lucky the man who is entrusted with the advertising! The Cleveland has become indirectly the medium of advertising the San Francisco World's Fair to be held in 1915 and C. W. Burgess is the man directly responsible. Burgess is a passenger on the Cleveland. Before the vessel was two days out he had buttons pinned on the lapels of all which read thusly: "Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, California, 1915." The only ones who escaped were those who spent three days under the influence of the maldemer, but they were not with the gem of the buttonmakers' art with first thing upon emerging from the companyway. Burgess has not yet received his "papers." They will reach him in Japan and will create him the minister plenipotentiary to the round, round world from the progressive and enterprising city that sits by the Golden Gate. The committee in charge of the exposition arrangements decided to advertise thusly at the last moment and Burgess was hustled off on the spot. He's been hustling ever since and doesn't expect to stop until 1915.

The Blooming Bush.

Some men are born wealthy, some acquire wealth and other have wealth thrust upon them. 'Tis the same with other things such as attention and notoriety. George T. Bush of Bellefonte, Pennsylvania, a member of the Clark tour, has had both thrust upon him since leaving Frisco Town. He acquired more and was born to be the first day out he was elected president of a newly created camera club which started this life with a hundred members. To this he was born and accepted his position with the grace of a man who has developed plates all his life instead of following the arduous existence of a newspaper man which he is. Later he was made the chairman of the dance committee by Paul Clark, a position which he accepted through his manifold accomplishments in that direction and then Clark made him Chief Announcer. That was thrust upon him but with the others he enters his part delicately and without boasting. He is a modest man as well as a friend of Jim McCallister, Jim McCallister was his host last night.

Shot 'Em All.

One of the loveliest men in the "harem" at the beach yesterday was M. Bonavillian, the representative of the Pacific Freres Company at present here. The advent of the Clark tour is a godsend to him in his official capacity and the pictures he took of the proceedings will advertise Honolulu in a much more popular town. He obtained some excellent pictures of the evening and of the lun preparations and most of the lot bedecked crowd.

A Maud Episode.

With such a conglomeration of the various branches of American life that has got together on the S. S. Cleveland it would be strange if the American passion for the consumption of horse shoes wasn't indulged at the tour. As a matter of fact it was. On board that vessel and accompanying Clark's globe trotters is R. S. McLure, a prominent hotel man of Wheeling, West Virginia. McLure is also famous for his particular fondness for the time-honored American game of poker but this is strictly interpolative. There is also on board a gentleman by the name of R. L. Landers of Springfield, Missouri. Mr. Landers combines the occupation of a hunter, lumberman and a sportsman. Affinities such as these were at once drawn together and the inevitable result occurred. Landers sold McLure a pair of mules. McLure is a straight bona fide sale and now Landers is in trouble because he can't deliver the goods.

Burger's Feet.

In accounting the day's events don't forget Captain Burger, father and mother to the Royal Hawaiian band who wiggled his baton arm off while in his endeavors to please the visiting multitude. First at the wharf, then at the Royal Hawaiian Hotel and then at the pavilion of the Outrigger Club, the doughty trainer of the Hawaiian musical tendencies pegged away at his baton. He is a grand old fellow, as "Hooper" U. N. Mary, and the famous choruses of "San Antonio." (Continued on Page Three.)
